Remote gaming options continue to be critical for Atlantic City's gaming operations, especially in the shoulder months when seasonal weather patterns are most likely to keep gamblers at home. Despite an extra day in the month, a wet and wintry February kept brick-and-mortar revenues for Atlantic City casinos modest. While monthly totals did not gain on 2023, they are in range for actiperecord performance. Sports wagering also turned in a solid month, improving nearly 70% compared to February 2023.

When combined, the solid performance of remote gaming and modest re and-mortar revenues resulted in a respectable 13.3% increase year-over-year. The company maintained a 14.3% lead on 2023 for the year-to-date.
