Galloway, NJ – College value and affordability were the key issues discussed by higher education thought leaders recently at Stockton College's initiative on Higher Education Strategic Information and Governance (HESIG).

National policy specialists, trustees and leaders from New Jersey colleges and universities meeting on Sept. 25 advised on two big issues: helping colleges increase the understanding of the value of a college degree to meet rising public demands; and improving governance practices to support accountability for public investment, trust, and for educational outcomes.
