

Marc Lowenstein Receives National Award from Academic Advising Group

Stockton Associate Provost for Personnel,
Programs and Policy Recognized for Service

For Immediate Release

Tuesday, October 11, 2011

Contact: Tim Kelly
Office of Public Relations
Galloway Township, NJ 08240
Tim.Kelly@stockton.edu
(609) 652-4950

Galloway Township, NJ – Dr. Marc Lowenstein, Associate Provost for Personnel Programs and Policy at The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey, has been recognized for his contribution to the development of academic advising programs. The award is presented to individuals who have advanced its development and policy. The award was presented to Dr. Lowenstein at the National Academic Advising Association (NACADA) annual conference in Denver, Colorado, on October 11, 2011.

ment to the development
s recognized for a series
lieve have advanced its
n said:

“Marc provides a leading voice in encouraging the scholarly examination of the purposes, value, and outcomes of academic advising.... Moreover, the vision of academic advising that Marc is revealing with his most recent work is brilliantly provocative. It suggests a future for academic advising that supports the central ideals of higher education, but challenges us all to think differently about how we organize our work within our institutions.”

“I’m especially pleased to have received this honor,” Lowenstein said, “because my work in this area has been one of my most gratifying professional experiences. And some of the ideas I’ve been exploring have roots in Stockton’s original vision for advising.” Lowenstein was formally honored and the award presented at the Association’s recent annual conference in Denver.

“The NACADA award confirmed what we already knew: that Dr. Marc Lowenstein is a national leader in the field of academic advising,” said Dr. Harvey Kesselman, Stockton’s provost and executive vice president. “Marc is richly deserving of this honor.”

#

