Galloway, NJ –The Stockton’s School of Arts and Humanities will present a 24-hour theatre festival entitled “Play in a Day” for Hurricane Relief, on Saturday, December 8, beginning at 7:30pm in the Campus Center Theatre.

The event, open to the public, will feature five new short plays written, directed and rehearsed over a 24-hour period.

Admission is two food items, excluding glass, cellophane and opened containers. There is also an encouraged donation of $10 per person ($5 for students). Items sought include canned fruit, bottled water, baby food, pet food, canned foods such as tuna, salmon, Spam and chicken; food items in plastic jars such as peanut butter and jelly and “shelf stable: milk products like condensed milk and Parmalat.

All proceeds from the event benefit the Stockton Student Relief Emergency Fund.

John Perovich, associate director for residence education, participated in a similar event while pursuing his master’s degree at New York University, and thought the idea was ripe for Stockton.

“I was thinking about what we could do to raise funds and collect resources for victims of this terrible storm,” Perovich said. “This seemed like something that could help people and at the same time be a lot of fun.”
