Atlantic City, NJ – Water Watch International will honor local first responders from Hurricane Sandy on Wednesday, Dec. 12, 2012, from 3 to 5 p.m. at Angelo's Fairmount Tavern here. Partnering in the event is the Stockton College chapter of Water Watch.

Awards will be presented to local police, fire, emergency management service workers, public employees and utility company workers, among others. "It will be an afternoon of awards, good food and gratitude for the brave men and women who played such a critical role in getting us through this storm," said Joel Fogel, President and Executive Director of Water Watch International.

The event will include a special meal prepared by celebrity chef Terry French, winner of the Food Network's "Extreme Chef" and entertainment by comedian LaTice, according to Fogel, who serves as an advisor to the student organization. "The afternoon is really all about providing the opportunity for people to thank the first responders," he said.

Stockton's Water Watch organization unifies those with a common interest in water quality issues as a means to expand their knowledge and experience. Fogel has worked closely with Stockton's Water Watch members on water quality monitoring projects throughout Atlantic County. For more information on the event, contact Fogel at 609-214-3967.
